Creative Writing

Fiction I

We will be exploring and discussing ways in which we can access the spaces and voices alive within our own experiences and translate them into fiction. We will experiment with what it means to see as writers so that we can transform the people, objects, and events of everyday life into stories, focusing on certain craft elements such as dialogue, point-of-view, plot, structure, and characterization. For this class, you are a writer and a member of a community of other writers. As writers, we are all works in progress and as such we'll be learning from each other and from other writers and their work. Most importantly, there are no right or wrong answers.

This is a workshop and reading intensive class.

Start: February 3rd, 2018

When: Saturdays from 11 am to 2:15 pm

Teacher: Ross Rader
